Like the bison captured in the background of this photograph, sharp-tailed grouse are hardy creatures, capable of dealing with the sometimes harsh realities of winter on the Northern Plains.

MARCH

In spring, male turkeys establish, defend and announce territories a few acres in size by strutting and gobbling. Wild turkeys were introduced into North Dakota in the early 1950s and hunting for these big birds, especially in spring, has steadily grown in popularity.

OCTOBER

While the habitat isn't there for chinook salmon to successfully spawn naturally in North Dakota, mature fish in the Missouri River System still succumb to the primal urge in fall to try.
